Promise Christian Church is a non-denominational Christian Church. In many ways it can be described as an “Independent Church,” which means it is autonomous and holds sovereign decision-making authority in its function as a local church.

While this provides Promise with a freedom to operate without the potential limitations of requirements which could be imposed by a corporate body outside of Promise, it also could expose Promise to a lack of accountability and mentorship that such a structure could provide.

In order to operate within boundaries of Financial Accountability, Promise uses an Accounting Bookkeeper whose qualifications include multi-million dollar corporate experience and an impeccable record. One Board member is the Chief Financial Officer who oversees every financial aspect of the corporation, banking, and other resources. Promise follows the laws imposed to restrict and protect it as a California Non-Profit Religious Corporation.

In order to provide Personal Accountability and Mentorship, our pastors connect regularly with other seasoned pastors in active ministry to review personal strengths and weaknesses, events and trends which Promise experiences, and counsel on how to continue the work of God’s Church.

Leadership is held to a more stringent level of personal accountability than other church attendees. Because they are the people who serve others in the church, Promise requires that Leadership members walk in the ways detailed in scripture.

Each of our Leadership Team members at some point may have access to the children, so all of them must pass a complete background check and be known by clean reputation. We require that they have a lifestyle of reading the Bible, praying, to walk in the strength of the Holy Spirit, and to follow the direction of the Bible.

Our pastors continually build up their faith in the Word and Prayer, and counsel with Godly ministers whose history is that of integrity and success in the advancement of the Kingdom of God.
